OKLAHOMA CITY, O. T., Nov. 17 .- (Special.) The statehood executive committec's special meeting here to-day accomplished the purpose for which it was called when Senator Sidney Clarke was chosen to go to Washington and lobby for Flynn's statehood bill. About sixty ticians of the territory answered Clarke's call for the meeting, the membership of one from each county being reinforced by men of all parties.

In the crowd the Republicans predominated, nearly all of the visitors, aside from the committee membership, which is nonpartisan, being of that party. Congressional Delegate Dennis T. Flynn was one of the first arrivals, and all day long he was the chief center of attraction. All of the visitors came to yell for Flynn and offer support for his statehood bill. Candidates for the new vacant United States district attorneyship were all on the ground shaking hands and renewing acquaintanceship, and quiet, informal conferences were the order of the day.

The committee meeting in the afternoon was a harmonious gathering. Immediate statehood was the desire of everyone present and the theme of each of the informal addresses made. In his telegram expressing regret at his enforced absence, ex-Governor A. J. Seay sounded the keynote when he wrote: "Oklahoma is entitled to. and must have immediate statehood. THE CONTEXT. During the building of the walls about Jerusaiem, Nehemiah active dwith great firmness and prudence. He promptly redressed the grievances of the common people who were oppressed by the nobles, himself setting an example of unself-shness by declining any compensation for his services as governor. He detected and frustrated the craft of Sanballat, the ruler of the Samaritans. The walls were finished B. C. 445, 160 years after the consustance of Nebuchadnezzar, and the government was established on a secure basis. The population of Jerusalem, as shown by the census taken at the time (Neh. vii-66) was nearly 50,000 souls. Once more the city of David had taken its place among the political influences of the world. THE BOOK. (Verses 1 and 2.) The good work of Nehemiah prepared for efforts in behalf of religion. The unsettled state of civil affairs for twelve years had prevented those reforms which were ordered by the king (Ezra vii:23) and good men had waited for favorable opportunities. But hope revived under the changed conditions. It is highly significant that the thought of all turned at once to the sacred volume in which the institutes of religion were outlined. It is probable that this was the same book which was written by Moses and which had been preserved all through the centuries, although some recent critics have attempted to show that Ezra revised and enlarged it for post-exilic times. How ever that may be—whether the identical or the revised work—all are agreed that it was the Pentateuch, substantially as we now if have it. There will be fun on tap at the Orpheum to-night when the first "amakeur night" will occur. The list of aspirants for stage honors who will present acts, some of which may have merit, but nearly all of which are sure to abound in unconscious humor, gives the first stage of the revised work—all are agreed that it was bowed their heads with their faces to the ground (Leviticus ix:2i), an attitude most appropriate to men in the Lord's presence, as it is assumed by the angels (Revelations vii:11).

THE TEACHING. (Verses 7 and 8). The Scripture reading that followed the prayer was continued until midday (verse 3). During that time a large part of the Mosaic code might have been delivered. Many of the audience did not understand what they heard, and the thirteen teachers, whose mames are recorded, were appointed to instruct them. Gathering small groups about them they read and expounded with all plainness, and applied all to present conditions. These teachers must have been priests and Levites, to whom such service had been appointed in the beginning (Levilicus X:11), and by whom the teacher's office had been profitably filled on several important occasions (ii. Chronicles xvii: 7-9). This exercise shows that the new order of things in restored Jerusaiem rested not upon the enthusiasm of the people or the will of the magistrates, but upon the law of God, interpreted by qualified men. The appeal was to the intelligence and conscience of all (John, viii:31-32). When the law of God was read and explained to the people they perceived that their conduct had been contrary to its holy requirements (Herb., iv:12) and they were convinced of their guilt and danger. With tender consciences and broken hearts they mourned for their transgressions. This same effect was produced upon the mind of Josiah when Shaphan read in his hearing from the sacred volume of (ii. Kings, xxii:11) which had been found in the temple, and Paul declares that this is the inevitable result of applying the truth enters into their minds the delusion is removed, and they look about to find some mode of relief.

SOCIETY OF FIVE DON'TS.

Founder Desires to Reform Manking and Put a Stop to Sunday Work.

A society has been organized in Brookly with the title "The Society of the Five Don'ts." Henry N. Niles, of 660 Quincy street, is the founder. The five don'ts to which the members pledge themselves t adhere are as follows:

1. Don't ride simply for pleasure on Sunday, Don't tsave on an ocean voyages ride in ablic conveyance on Sunday. John't mail letters on Sunday.

5. Don't mail letters on Sunday, except i are of an emergency.

6. Don't mail letters on Sunday.

5. Don't mail letters on Sunday.

Mr. Niles says that his society already has a membership of twenty, and he is confident that it will have a large growth. He argues that the cars will stop running if enough people refrain from riding to make their operation on Sunday unprofitable; that the Sunday newspaper will cease to be published when the society grows large enough to take away all the readers; that places where goods are sold on Sunday will close after people cease to buy, and that the United States postal service will cease every Sunday when everybody becomes a Five-don'ter and no letters are mailed on that day. mailed on that day.

Mr. Niles does not believe that riding on cars and mailing letters on Sunday are in themselves scandalous offenses. The trouble, he says, is that these practices compel men to labor on the Lord's day.
